17. Changes to the Programme

The University’s prospectus and other promotional material for each academic year are published approximately 18 months in advance. There may be occasions where the University needs to make changes to your published Programme either before or after your enrolment. Changes to taught provision are a natural result of our approach to quality enhancement and our recognition of the importance of contemporary practice and research-led teaching. Any proposed changes to your programme and/or modules are taken forward in consultation with the student body. The processes are described at:
Some optional modules will only run with a threshold number of students. Where there are threshold student number requirements this will be made clear in our promotional material and in your student handbook(s).

There may be occasions where material changes need to be made to your chosen programme of study (including withdrawal or suspension of the programme or modules). This may happen where:

- there are insufficient numbers of students applying to a programme so that it would mean that we were unable to provide an excellent student learning experience;
- key staff have left the University;
- recommendations have been made through the University’s quality assurance processes (including feedback from students and external examiners) that require immediate changes;
- professional, statutory and regulatory bodies require changes for their accreditation requirements;
